PRINCIPAL'S NEWS

20th July 2018

In his Newsletter of July 1, Steve Francis wrote the following about school culture.

Working with people is complex. People are unpredictable and you never quite know what is going on in somebody else's life. Added to this complexity is my belief that many educators are attracted to work in education because we like working with people AND we want to be LIKED by people. This drive to be popular and liked by others makes it particularly challenging for me to have a difficult conversation. I am sure I am not alone. I am worried that other people won't LIKE me if I have called them on their behaviour and had a difficult conversation.

However, the behaviour that you turn a blind eye to, is the standard that you accept. Whilst I might justify to myself that I am 'picking my fights' or 'choosing the best time' to respond, turning a blind eye to unacceptable behaviour sets a low benchmark for the behaviour I am willing to accept. By tolerating the behaviours we don't want to see, what we are actually doing is reinforcing them. They become the norm and once they are established, they are very difficult to change. By choosing to ignore what we don't want to see, we create an environment that will make it difficult to raise standards. The behaviours that we accept create the culture of the school.

It is vital that we role model the behaviours and culture that we want. As a leader, our attitude is contagious. It is essential that we demonstrate through both our words and our actions the behaviours and culture that we want in our school.

I think Steve's article has a lot to offer schools and parents as well. We are all guilty of ignoring some very poor behaviour from our own children. We justify it to ourselves because we fear our children won't like us if we correct or confront their poor behaviour. We fear the tantrum that may follow and so on. Our children depend on us to set a high bar for their behaviour. It simply sets them up well for life.

Emma Lascelles

After a climbing incident at Mt Walsh, Emma was airlifted to the Sunshine Coast hospital. Thankfully, most of Emma's injuries have been soft tissue and abrasions, and as a result she has now been transferred back to Bundaberg. Emma and her family are very grateful for your thoughts and prayers, and we will keep you updated on her progress.

On a final note, the P&F meeting planned for next week has been postponed and a revised date will be advised In due course.
